

Dominique Haughton (PhD MIT 1983, BM University Massachusetts Lowell 2022) is Professor of Mathematical Sciences and Global Studies at Bentley University in Waltham, Massachusetts, near Boston, and Affiliated Researcher at the Université Paris 1 (Pantheon-Sorbonne) and at the Université Toulouse 1. Research interests include applied statistics, business analytics, global analytics, music analytics, data mining, and model selection. Professor Haughton's work concentrates on how to best leverage modern analytics techniques in order to address questions of business or societal interest. Author of three monographs, a Springer brief, and of over seventy articles which have appeared in journals such as The American Statistician, Computational Statistics and Data Analysis, Journal of Interactive Marketing, Telecommunications Policy, Economic Development and Cultural Change, Studies in Family Planning, Journal of Population Economics, Journal of Biosocial Science, Annals of Statistics, Sankhya, Journal of Statistical Computation and Simulation, Communications in Statistics, Statistica Sinica. Ecole Normale Supérieure Graduate. Bachelor of Music degree in piano performance and sound recording technology. Fellow of the American Statistical Association. Elected to the Council of the International Statistical Institute.

www.dominiquehaughton.com